On a sunny day the good people of New York had a daily view of a magnificent balloon, floating in the air. It was a sight that pleased many, however, to make earth by a stout rope some 2000 yards in length. Nearly everybody knows that these balloons are always found on the ground, however, and many of our earnest citizens have called - "this balloon is not doing anything," or it's "an impossible thing." Not so much the balloon, of course, as the interest of the people who are willing to see it. When a balloon is seen, it's very successful, too. It was a grand balloon. It was a fine day, the sun was up, and there was no wind. The balloon was seen by a great many people, and it made quite a sensation. It was a very fine day, and the balloon was seen by a great many people.

When we gained the platform, the huge proportions of the air ship were apparent. It was dif-EE to keep the machine together, not sustaining any of the weight of the men, and the men were so high that the balloon was not visible from the ground. On the platform were the aeronauts and the vet-erans of the air, who were all dressed in uniform and preparing for their departure. The balloon was seen by a great many people, and it made quite a sensation. It was a very fine day, and the balloon was seen by a great many people.

Among the group collected together on the plat- form was a young man who had been with the aeronauts for some time. He was one of the most promising of the party, and he had been sent out to observe the balloon as it ascended. To tell the truth, we did not see the balloon as it ascended. The men were all dressed in uniform and preparing for their departure. The balloon was seen by a great many people, and it made quite a sensation. It was a very fine day, and the balloon was seen by a great many people.

As the watch told us a half hour before the balloon took its departure, the men were all on the platform, and the balloon was raised. The beach was crowded with people, and the men were all dressed in uniform and preparing for their departure. The balloon was seen by a great many people, and it made quite a sensation. It was a very fine day, and the balloon was seen by a great many people.
